Health Director Issues Appeal

It is comforting to parents to know that many new ways have been found through recent discoveries in medical science, to protect the life and health of babies and young children.

Specific preventive measures have almost wiped out diphtheria and smallpox; a vaccine now in general use is helping protect children from whooping cough and tetanus. Protective substances also have been discovered for giving temporary protection against certain communicable diseases, if given soon after exposure, or for making lighter or shorter an atcual attack of the disease.

More is known, too, about the manner in which communicable diseases are spread, so that they are less prevalent. As a rule, children are healthier because parents are better informed about nutrition and child care. Thus children are less likely to have complications when they do contract a communicable disease and are more likely to recuperate quickly. All these factors have played a part in reducing the mortality from communicable diseases.

Recently seven children in Detroit, Michigan, ages two to thirteen years, contracted diphtheria. All were in the same family and were hospitalized. None were immunized against diphtheria. Had this been done, the disease would not have occurred.

"I urge and recommend that all babies and children be immunized against smallpox, whooping cough diphtheria, and tetanus.Consult your doctor or come to the Health Department clinics," Dr. H. E. Jenkins, Appomattox County Health Director, advised today.

Immunization clinics are held at the Appomattox Health Department Office every Wednesday from 8:30 to 12:00 noon.

FORD TO PRODUCE THE CONTINENTAL

Dearborn, Mich.- William Clay Ford announced yesterday that Ford Motor Company will introduce in 1955 a high-quality, low-volume automobile to be known as the Continental.

Mr. Ford, a company vice-president and general manager of its Special Product Division, said the new car will be "a very modern version" of the Lincoln-Continental, first built as a 1940 model and continued until 1948. Mr. Ford also disclosed that the name of the Special Product Division will be changed to the Continental Division of Ford Motor Company.

"The new Continental is being planned for public introduction sometime in 1955," Mr. Ford told a gathering of members of the Lincoln Continental Owners' Club at Greenfield Village. This voluntary, non-profit organization held an all-day rally and staged a parade through Dearborn and Detroit yesterday.

Subscription rate: $2.00 a year; payable in advance.

FOLKS, we are as sorry as we can be that you were so greatly inconvenienced over the weekend of the Hazel hurricane because of the lack of electricity for the many electrical services that you have been accustomed to having at your beck and call at the flip of your switch.

Despite our best preparations, based on warnings ahead of the approaching "Hazel," we couldn't buck the fury and devastation which were packed in that hurricane. It struck our service area in full force and practically paralyzed ten of our eleven districts. Of a total of 620,000 customers, over 330,000 lost their electric service, due largely to the trees thrown by the high winds across our power lines —main feeders as well as customer service lines. The most destructive storm we have ever experienced!

When the hurricane knocked out the first service, our linemen and service crews began the work of restoration. They worked throughout the storm under very difficult and dangerous conditions. They worked around the clock. Since repairs of this nature can be done only by men experienced in electrical work, we called for help from our neighbor public utility companies and from others further away. Additional crews were promptly and cheerfully loaned us by the Appalachian Electric Power Company, Potomac Edison Company, Monongahela Power Company, Alabama Power Company and Georgia Power Company. These, plus our own crews, were further supplemented by 75 private construction crews specializing in this type of work.

In the rural areas as well as in the cities we have really gone "all out" in the effort to restore service promptly to everyone and we believe the line crews have all done a wonderful job in a fine spirit of cooperation and public service. The job is now nearing completion. If anyone is still without service, a telephone call will be appreciated so that prompt attention may be given to its restoration.

Throughout this storm our customers have particularly been on our minds and on our hearts. You were worried about your freezer locker, refrigeration was off in the kitchen, the electric range was cold, some of you had sickness in the family, and countless other reasons there were why you needed electricity. Your anxious calls swamped our switchboards where telephone operators were trying their best to help you. Many of you could not even get your calls through. But we knew you were in trouble and we were working toward reaching you as quickly as possible.

Vepco will gratefully remember the time spirit in which you and its other customers weathered this storm"with us and the understanding you manifested for our difficulties. We are really grateful for all your consideration and your many kindnesses, expressed and implied.

We hope we shall all be spared another hurricane—at least one having "Hazel's" terrific ability to make trouble.

Virginia Forest Service has foresters at the University of Charlottesville, and other located in Waverly, Salem, Tappahannock, Sandston, Abingdon, Richmond and Lynch. The Virginia Forest is primarily a service organization responsible for preventing and fighting forest fires, enforcing laws, producing tree seed, measuring and marking timbered areas and examining timbered areas for woodland owners.

Consulting foresters may be found in all sections of the state. Usually these are timber estimators who give good estimates on the value of timber. Each county agent has a list of these foresters who usually charge a fee basis.

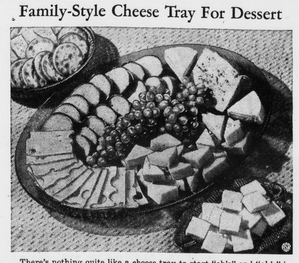
Family-Style Cheese Tray For Dessert



There's nothing quite like a cheese tray to start "oh's" and "ah's" in the family circle. And what a help it is to the dessert-weary meal planner.

The general rule for the choice of cheeses to be used on the cheese tray is easy—choose some mild, some sharp, some soft, some hard. To arouse curiosity, it's fun to include among the favorites one cheese that's new to your family.

For eye appeal, the various cheeses may be cut in wedges, slices, strips, or cubes.

Apples, pears, and grapes are probably the favorite fruits to go with cheese. Others that will provide taste treats are bananas, strawberries with stems left on, fresh figs, fresh or preserved kumquats, pineapple wedges, peaches, and apricots.

Walnuts or almonds in the shell, as well as the many varieties of nuts from cashews to peanuts, are mighty good with cheese. A basket of assorted crackers and a dish of butter are a "must."

Here is a tasty, easy spread that can be especially included for the youngsters.

Zippy Cheddar Spread

½ pound sharp Cheddar cheese, shredded
1 tablespoon catsup
1½ teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
Dash or two of cayenne or Tabasco sauce
¼ teaspoon salt
2 green onions with part of tops, minced—or 3 tablespoons finely cut chives
½ cup cream

Rub bowl with a cut clove of garlic if desired. Mix together all ingredients and beat well with a fork, rotary beater or electric mixer on moderately low speed. When fluffy, heap in shallow dish or in a half grapefruit shell. Serve chilled. Refrigerate to keep.

PLAN NOW TO TOP-DRESS YOUR PASTURES

Fall, winter, and early spring are good seasons to top-dress your pastures, reminds John Shoulders, Extension pasture specialist at V. P. I.

The pasture plants are dormant during most of these periods. This reduces the burning that often results from applying fertilizer during the growing season, the pasture specialist explains. Also, the dormant seasons provide an opportunity to top-dress pastures when other work on the farm is not as demanding as during the regular growing season.

Extremely dry weather has damaged many pastures over the state. In order for these pastures to recover, they must have adequate plant food. If the damage has been severe, it may be advisable to plow up the old sod and do a complete reseeding job. Many pastures, however can be expected to recover with the use of fritilizer and proper grazing management.

If you have lost ladino clover from your pasture and have a good stand of grass, you can usually reestablish the clover by top-dressing with phosphate and potash and reseeding ladino clover in the spring, according to Shoulders. When following this practice, keep the grass grazed or cut short during the spring months.

Have your pasture soils tested to find out if lime is needed and also the level of phosphate and potash in the soil. If lime is needed, apply enough to raise the pH to between 6.0 to 6.5, preferably 6.5.
